

There is no limit to the wonders of Radio. Almost every day there is a opening new fields to its delighted listeners. Education and information may be ascertained from it; art and science contribute its choicest treasures; the result of sporting events are by its means immediately available; grand opera and drama may be enjoyed at home, and those who take pleasure in lighter things may take in high-class vaudeville.

These winter days you do not need to brave the snowdrifts to attend church, political meetings, or religious convocations and sermons are broadcasted, and you have nothing to do but tune in your instrument.

For the increasing number of radio fans have established a fellowship of the air. Clubs are being established and those who own instruments are constantly making the acquaintance in the profitable manner
